

EDITORS' PICKS »

1 - 6 of 18

The long, slow death of first class

Want this job? Let me sleep with your girlfriend

Will gun control always be a stale debate?

Most common complaints about Google Nexus 7

The decline of Google (and the Internet's) ad business

More women are breadwinners? It's complicated

Sleep-Promoting (and Sleep-Stealing) Foods

By Angela Haupt | U.S. News & World Report LP - Thu, 19 Jul, 2012 10:33 AM EDT

0

 0

TRENDING TODAY »

Literally the world's worst economy

Businesses that will let you blow stuff up

20 most expensive cities on earth

10 weirdest restaurants in the U.S.

New iPad in China: A very unApple-like product launch

Tossing and turning. Long, sleepless nights. They're draining, frustrating, and, well, exhausting—physically and mentally. And they're usually unnecessary, experts say, but can be counteracted by minor dietary tweaks. Indeed, what you put in your mouth can directly affect how many ZZZs come out. "The majority of people with day-to-day insomnia could be sleeping like puppies if they made just a few changes," says Jacob Teitelbaum, medical director of the Fibromyalgia and Fatigue Centers, which are located nationwide, and author of From Fatigued to Fantastic. "And if you know how to eat right? You're going to be way ahead of the game."

From cherries to almonds, consider these soothing, snooze-inducing foods:

Bananas. Make them a daily staple. They're packed with potassium and magnesium, nutrients that double as natural muscle relaxants. Plus, they contain the sleep-inducing amino acid tryptophan, which ultimately turns into serotonin and melatonin in the brain. Serotonin is a neurotransmitter that promotes relaxation; melatonin is a chemical that promotes sleepiness. It takes about an hour for tryptophan to reach the brain, so plan your snack accordingly.

See: [Top-Rated Diets Overall]

Protein. High-protein foods promote sleep, and they also fight acid reflux, Teitelbaum says. That's important, since heartburn often flares up at night, making sleep all but impossible. Smart bets for a bedtime snack: two slices of lean meat or cheese, a hardboiled egg, or some cottage cheese mixed with fresh fruit.

Almonds. They're full of protein. And they also provide a solid dose of magnesium, promoting sleep and muscle relaxation. Chow down on a handful before bed, or spread some almond butter on toast.

TODAY'S HEADLINES »

1. Enbridge pledges new Northern Gateway safety measures
2. Inflation rate rises to 1.5% in June
3. TSX slides with energy shares
4. Indebted Valencia asks for help from Spanish government
5. Banks in Libor probe mull settlement

ADVERTISEMENT

Register & remit money to India through
HDFC Bank Quickremit

And watch movies online for 3 months.
Absolutely FREE!

Reckley

Terms & Conditions apply

LATEST PHOTOS »

1 - 4 of 16

Inside NYC's ultra-expensive One57

Louis Vuitton opens large in China

Milk. Downing a warm glass will encourage sweet dreams, suggests Donald Hensrud, chair of the division of preventive medicine at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. It's full of tryptophan, so it will have a sedative effect. Plus, it's a good source of calcium, which helps regulate the production of melatonin. "If you can't sleep or if you're waking up in the middle of the night, get out of bed and have some milk," Hensrud says. Make it even sweeter with a teaspoon of honey.

See: [10 Best Foods for Your Hair]

Cherries. They're one of the only natural sources of melatonin, according to a study published in the Journal of Experimental Botany in 2011. Have a handful an hour before bedtime; if fresh ones aren't in season, go for cherry juice or the dried variety.

Tea. Green tea contains theanine, which helps promote sleep. But really, all varieties are soothing enough to encourage drowsiness, so long as they're decaf. "Tea helps you relax," says Hensrud, who suggests herbal, mild flavors.

Oatmeal. Just one bowl provides plenty of calcium, magnesium, phosphorus, silicon, and potassium—all sleep-promoting nutrients. Go easy on sweeteners, though, since too much sugar could sabotage shut-eye.

While loading up on sleep-promoting foods is important, so is steering clear of those that'll have the opposite effect:

High-fat meals. Initially, that greasy burger and fries will make you feel tired by cutting off some of the oxygen headed to your brain. But research suggests people who have heavy, fatty meals in the evening clock fewer hours of total sleep than those who don't. Be particularly cautious if you suffer from acid reflux: Meals loaded with calories and fat can worsen indigestion and heartburn, not to mention leaving you too uncomfortable to sleep. If a heavy meal is on the menu, make sure it's at least three hours before bedtime.

See: [Best Foods to Eat for Your Mood—and a Few Bad Ones]

Caffeine. Go easy on caffeine, especially if it's late afternoon or you're getting ready to call it a day. It's often the culprit lurking behind troublesome sleep. Watch out for less-obvious sources, too, like chocolate, gum, and certain medications. Still, not everyone finds it problematic. "We metabolize caffeine differently—there's a genetic basis," Hensrud says. "If I have caffeine even in late afternoon, I'll be up all night, while my wife can have a cup of coffee and go right to bed."

Alcohol. Lay off before turning in, or at least stick to a moderate amount (one drink for women, two for men). Initially, those beers may induce sleep, but ultimately you're in for fragmented snoozing. "The quality of sleep changes," Hensrud says. "It's not as restful—even if you're sleeping, it's not as good."

More From US News & World Report

- 5 Weight-Loss Tricks That Don't Involve Dieting or \(Much\) Exercise
- How to Conquer Food Cravings
- Want to Lose Weight? Get Some Sleep

Follow @YahooFinanceCA on Twitter, become a fan on Facebook

Photos of the week (20 July 2012)

5 luxe mansions with, yes, private waterparks

! FINANCE CANADA INSIGHT »

- Canada's retirement hot spots Gail Johnson - 1 hour 37 minutes ago
- Before the Bell: 4 things you should know Liam Lahey - 7 hours ago
- Caught in a debt web? Simplify and consolidate Dale Jackson - Thu, 19 Jul, 2012 1:11 PM EDT
- Canadian investors, advisors increasingly cautious Liam Lahey - Thu, 19 Jul, 2012 12:44 PM EDT
- Before the Bell: 5 things you should know Liam Lahey - Thu, 19 Jul, 2012 7:09 AM EDT

ADVERTISEMENT

2.25%
MORTGAGE REFINANCE
CONTINUE
eLendingSaver.com
Terms and Conditions Apply* 3.1% APR